

Rationality and the Structure of the Self,
Volume II: A Kantian Conception

I require of a critique of pure practical reason that when it is completed, we must be able to show its unity with the speculative in a common principle, because in the end there can be only one and the same reason, which must be differentiated solely in its application. [G, Ak.391]